Greetings from the President

Impressive - Alarming - Promising

We do indeed live in very challenging times. Fundamental changes are taking place and tectonic shifts in the geopolitical power grid cannot be ignored.

Of course, musical life doesn’t remain unaffected. Our music competitions have a particular responsibility, as in the midst of all these social upheavals, they continue to give the many extraordinary and extremely accomplished talents a widely visible stage and enable them to articulate their own ideas of beauty and sophistication using music as a transnational language.

It is impressive to see how our member competitions have become even more connected globally in recent years, despite the isolation inflicted by the pandemic. Many have made a huge leap towards professionalization, employing sophisticated streaming strategies; they are well on their way to becoming not just platforms but producers of artistic content in their own right.

It is worrying that the relevance of some of our competitions is being questioned and their artistic mission undermined, while at the same time the public institutions serving as their sponsors are lamenting the brutalization and profanization of society; they are actively contributing to this ethical and cultural decline by withdrawing their support of the arts.

It is promising that interest in classical music in its many forms is increasing and that numerous competitions - especially in Asia - see the values of our federation as a compass in their work and are applying for membership.

It is a good moment for the WFIMC. The relevance of the work of all our members has substantially increased, the radius of action has expanded thanks to new associate members, while the number of regular members has remained constant. I would like to express my sincere thanks to the two vice presidents, Sisi Ye and Elisabeth Kozik, the entire board and of course the general secretary, Florian Riem and his staff.

The cynicism and idleness of the so-called “international culture industry” are often criticized, and rightfully so. The passion for music and the promotion of its talents that our members continuously show in their work is one of the best alternatives to this.

Sincerely Yours

Peter Paul Kainrath
President
Greetings from the Secretary General

Dear Friends,

With great pleasure we present to you the 2024 Yearbook of the World Federation.

Like our society with all its current geopolitical divisions and ongoing conflicts, today’s classical music world is caught in powerful turbulence. Discrimination, imbalance, approximations, fake competitions have become commonplace. Within this environment, a global institution like the WFIMC, which embodies and warrants the values, standards and authenticity of its member competitions, is vitally important and beneficial not only for young artists, but for music itself.

With last year’s Horowitz Competition Kyiv-Geneva we tried to reach out to our colleagues and to support young artists gravely affected by an ongoing war. Meanwhile, the Middle East has been engulfed in yet another war, and the world continues to become more polarised politically, socially, and culturally. In one of our yearbook interviews, Austrian pianist and artist manager Rico Gulda tells why music is so important in this context: “the greatest danger today is that we fall in a purely black and white picture. But music evokes in us different answers to the many questions that exist, and a musical message can carry a different meaning for you than it does for me”.

2024 we will return to Italy with our 68th General Assembly in Parma. Following many suggestions and comments, we will for the first time not only hold our regular annual conference, but also add a new forum to provide more insights to the ever-changing world of marketing and communications for our members, their staff, colleagues and stakeholders: our first WFIMC Marketing Forum will take place ahead of the GA, on 6 and 7 June 2024.

We hope that the wealth of information contained in this yearbook will not only help young artists find their way through the ever changing world of music competitions, but also provide a pillar of information to facilitate communication and dialogue among our members, associate members, and friends.

As we prepare for elections at the Parma assembly, I would like to take this opportunity to thank WFIMC president Peter Paul Kainrath and our board of directors for their great contributions, their dedication and tireless support of the World Federation and all its activities during the past years.

Sincerely Yours

Florian Riem
Secretary General
MISSION

The WFIMC brings together the world’s most important music competitions, striving for artistic excellence, authenticity, and fairness to support young artists on the path to their international careers.

While denouncing all forms of discrimination, prejudice and partisanship, we aim to share the common values of integrity, equality and artistic freedom with our membership.

General Assembly, Geneva 1962
HISTORY

When World War II ended, many countries had been deprived of culture, and particularly of music, for several years. Rebuilding musical life from the rubble was not easy, but the process quickly gained momentum due to an incredible need for art, after years of cultural starvation. Music Competitions had existed before the war, of course: the Naumburg in New York was founded in 1926; the Chopin in Warsaw in 1927; the Queen Elisabeth in Brussels in 1937; the Geneva Competition in 1939. But in the 50s, competitions were proliferating at an amazing rate, and some kind of order was urgently needed to mark the difference between serious competitions and those for the tourist industry or those secretly organized by impresarios eager to find new prodigies. Thus, the Swiss Composer and director of the Geneva Conservatory, Henri Gagnebin, along with his friend André-François Marescotti, drew up the plans for the World Federation of International Music Competitions. The first meetings seemed more like a club than a committee, and delegates exchanged their views and experiences from around one single table. But soon, a protocol was established and plans for expansion were made.

"To be truly international, a competition must be open to competitors from all countries, within the prescribed age limit; juries must include more foreigners than nationals, to avoid biased pressure; two competitions in the same branch, residing in the same town or its environs, cannot be part of the federation: one or the other, to cut short local rivalries." Henri Gagnebin

(Duchene-Thégarid: "Une certaine idée de la musique", 2014)

The first constituent General Assembly of the Federation took place on February 17th, 1957 and was attended by 13 founding member competitions: Bolzano (Busoni), Brussels (Queen Elisabeth), Budapest (Liszt), Geneva, Genoa (Paganini), Liège, Munich (ARD), Naples (Casella), Paris (Long-Thibaud), Poznan (Wieniawski), Prague (Prague Spring), Vercelli (Viotti), and Warsaw (Chopin).
Later on, everything was laid out in a set of simple but concise statutes covering but one page. Annual meetings, usually on the weekend after Easter, were alternatingly held in Geneva and a foreign city, each hosted by a different member competition.

“Switzerland has an enormous amount to contribute in this kind of setting. Because we have a deep-rooted tradition of dialogue, of compromise, of participatory democracy. It’s natural in Switzerland. And it’s no coincidence that Switzerland is home to the headquarters of many federations. It’s a quality we’ve built up over time. We’ve been lucky enough to be spared wars, to be a decentralized country where politics has to be very pragmatic: you have to get things in all areas: religions, different cultures... We’re obliged to make it all work together. And it works!” Didier Schnorhk

Once established, the Federation began to grow rapidly. From 13 members in 1957, it expanded to 35 members in 1970, 54 members in 1980, and 83 members in 1990. Today, the number is around 120 competitions worldwide. From time to time some competitions are discontinued, or they simply disappear due to lack of funding, or reorganization of the organizing institution. But on the other hand, there seems to be no lack of newly created competitions either.

Until 1985, General Assemblies were held alternatingly between Geneva and other cities. Given the large number of members, that principle was abandoned, and Assemblies are now held without any geographical fixtures.

The international music competition is a phenomenon of modern times: a phenomenon because of its incredible development today. It is also a mystery since its underlying motivations are difficult to define, whether among competitions or among the public. Almost unknown at the beginning of the 20th century, the international music competition appeared in the 30’s, flourished in the 50’s, but has developed at a truly staggering rate from the 60’s to the 90’s. The international music competition is a fundamental, indispensable part of musical life today, if it did not exist, we would have to invent it, as much for young musicians as for the public...

Remembering Renate Ronnefeld (1932-2023)

Born in 1932, Renate Ronnefeld grew up in Salzburg and studied the violin. Working as an announcer and department director at the BR (Bayerischer Rundfunk), she soon became an iconic figure in the world of music competitions: in 1960 she took over the ARD Music Competition; 1991 she became president of the World Federation of International Music Competitions- a position she held for 9 years, followed by another 9 years as Secretary General. On 17 November last year, Renate passed away at the age 91. She will always be remembered as a remarkable person and a highly skilled leader, but also for her welcoming smile and her generous spirit.

ARTIST FORUM
Born in Zurich as the youngest son to a family of musicians, Rico Gulda grew up in Munich, where he studied the piano first with his mother Yuko, then continued with legendary German virtuoso Ludwig Hoffmann. At the Vienna Music University, he then studied with Noel Flores, whilst also working with his father, the late pianist-composer Friedrich Gulda.

Initially embarking on a career as pianist, he performed with international orchestras such as the Vienna Philharmonic, Verdi Orchestra Milan, Mozarteum Orchestra of Salzburg, and others, while recording for the Naxos, Deutsche Grammophon, Orplid, and Amphion labels.

Rico Gulda taught piano at Mozarteum University (Salzburg), Hansei University (Seoul), and in masterclasses in Vienna, Vietnam, and Japan. He now regularly holds music management workshops and is frequently invited as juror at major international piano competitions.

Currently head of artistic planning and dramaturgy of Wiener Konzerthaus, he is responsible for over 600 concerts per season. He is also artistic director of the Oberösterreichische Stiftskonzerte summer festival.

ARTIST FORUM : RICO GULDA

WFIMC: May we begin and talk a little about your father. Friedrich Gulda won First Prize in Geneva in 1946, when he was sixteen. Did he ever talk about this, or what the competition meant to him?

Rico Gulda: There are some stories from people who experienced Geneva at the time. In fact, there was not only my father, but also others like Paul Badura Skoda and Jörg Demus- a whole delegation! One of the founders of the Geneva Competition was Frédéric Liebstöckl, an important figure in the cultural life of the city, who was originally from Vienna, so that must have been the connection.

My father himself said a few things that were important to him. First of all, coming from post-war Vienna and having just experienced the horror of World War II, arriving in Switzerland at that time must have been simply overwhelming. In culinary terms, at least- because the buffet was so sumptuous, Switzerland was an idyllic place undamaged by the war. This was maybe one of his strongest memories- there was so much to eat. But musically, he also mentioned one important thing: during his stay at the competition, maybe because of his host family, he came in contact with the francophone world. His love for French music, a strong love especially for Debussy and Ravel, was awakened there, and not by his teacher Seidelhofer in Vienna. And the fact that he won First Prize- he never really talked about that.

Did Competitions affect him or interest him? Did he not reject them later on?

After Geneva, he was no longer particularly interested in competitions, especially not classical competitions. Later, when he fully lived out his love for improvisation, he was convinced that concentrating solely on classical repertoire was not enough. But he did initiate a jazz competition in Vienna, at the Konzerthaus, which actually produced really great winners- artists who later became big names in the scene.

What about yourself- did your father ask you to take part in competitions?

We never talked about it really. It was not important for him. I grew up in Munich and studied with my mother, before I came to Vienna to take lessons with Ludwig Hoffmann. At that time, I was one of the youngest among a number of really talented students, who also went to competitions. Margarita Höhenrieder was one of his star students. Later, when I began to study at the University with Professor Petermandl, his student Stefan Vladar had just won the Beethoven Competition. But in general, competitions were not quite as present as today- without the internet everything took more time and was much more complicated back then.
From the perspective of an Artistic Planner at the Vienna Konzerthaus, how important are competitions for you today?

Choosing pianists, soloists, conductors—competitions are and have always been an important "filter". It’s incredibly encouraging to see how many talented people dedicate themselves to performing music—with heart, body and soul. Out of this abundance of talent emerges a top group, which then plays itself into the limelight as preparation for their future concert life. And some of them are “here to stay”, so to speak. For a while, people said that with the large number of competitions, there are so many prize winners that the whole concept doesn’t make sense anymore. But I don’t join this chorus. I still believe that competitions have a kind of filter mechanism, which is very important for us promoters, because of course it is impossible for us to always hear everyone.

With two, three, sometimes four concerts a day you are a very busy person. Still you could take the time to spend a month in Fort Worth, Texas, as part of the jury of the Cliburn 2022. What comes to your mind first when you remember this time?

It was a wonderful time, incredibly nice for me, because my everyday life revolves so much about work. Management. And although I remember that it was very intense for everyone—jury, candidates, staff—we were very close together and actually devoted ourselves mainly to this one thing, which is what our lives are all about: music. In a way it was a kind of time travel into my own past. It was really all about making music and not managing it, as we listened for hours and hours to highly talented people who gave their best and, so to speak, put everything in the service of music.

The Cliburn put a great emphasis on the independence of every juror. You were asked not to discuss candidates at all. Did this really work?

Yes, it worked really well this time. For two reasons: Firstly, we all got along incredibly well and simply stuck to the rule of no talking. We didn’t share our own experiences, period. And secondly, there was still a bit of Corona regime—it was just the end of the pandemic—so we had very little contact to the outside world. The weeks at the competition felt like we were in a bubble, in which we moved. That was funny…

But in any case, I think it’s really better not to exchange ideas at all. When you don’t get into discussions, you also do not influence each other. And at this particular competition, there was a very special dynamic. With an exceptional candidate like Yunchan Lim, who is already at the beginning of a major international career, we were able to come to an agreement easily and quickly.

The 2022 Cliburn did not include a chamber music round but a Mozart Concerto instead. How important is chamber music for you today?

On one hand, chamber music is often underrepresented at piano competitions. But chamber music requires a kind of musical understanding that some soloists lack, and I think it’s wrong to make it an unconditional qualification for everyone. You cannot say, for example, that Grigory Sokolov doesn’t play enough chamber music. He is a unique artist with what he does, whether he plays chamber music or not.

On a more practical side, I always feel sorry for the chamber musicians who have to play the same piano quintet over and over for days on end. But as for the question of how important chamber music is— I don’t have a good comparison, but what I can say is that where I work and in the city where I live, chamber music still plays and incredibly important role. At the Konzerthaus alone, we have eight or nine subscription series dedicated to various chamber music formations. I am not exaggerating, maybe there are even ten. We have four string quartet cycles alone. Chamber music is very much alive there, and chamber music with piano is an integral part of it. There is a very rich and booming string quartet scene, and there are also a lot of quartet competitions around. But back to the Cliburn: I am just not sure we can continue to expect solo and chamber music star qualities from every artist, even though that would be the ideal. But like I said, people like Grigory Sokolov play mainly solo and others like Igor Levit are very gifted chamber musicians as well. Everyone has to find their own way.

In 2023, you were part of the Horowitz Competition Kyiv-Geneva, a project in support of Ukraine.

In Vienna, you are confronted with the ongoing cultural war more or less on a daily basis…

The language of music should be unconditional, so to speak, no matter where someone comes from, and I see this exactly in the same way as the Horowitz Competition. The Horowitz brings back strong memories for me in many ways. One thing I found wonderful was the initiative of a combined orchestra (Orchestre de la Suisse Romande performing with musicians from the National Orchestra of Ukraine), which I found a very unusual constellation. I have actually never experienced that before: people performing together who hardly speak the same language, verbally. I really liked it as a sign of what music can and must achieve today, whatever its significance.

Apart from a philosophical and aesthetic point of view, it is great to see simply what music makes possible. An artist who was just on stage with us put this into really beautiful words: Asaf Avidan, the Israeli singer and songwriter said he asked himself how you can just go on stage and make music in times like these. And he also provided the answer. He said, the greatest danger today is that we fall into a purely black and white picture. As the world becomes increasingly complex, we look for the simplest answers and we listen only to those who provide simple answers. Music, so to speak, is the antithesis of that: on one hand it is easy to listen to, but on the other hand it offers many, many answers to a lot of questions. Although there is only one sender of each message, there are many recipients in the audience, many. Music evokes in us different answers to the many questions that exist, and a musical message can carry a different color, a different meaning for you than it does for me. That, I thought, we could experience at the Horowitz Competition in an exemplary way: how important it is for the language of music to be heard.
WFIMC: This summer, the Mahler Competition was held, very successfully, for the seventh time. The collaboration with the Bamberg Symphony is a very unique one, and your jury is quite extraordinary, to say the least...

Marcus Rudolf Axt: I think this jury is particularly exciting because we have people from different disciplines and with completely different perspectives. And that’s what distinguishes conducting competitions from the other disciplines. The main question is: who has the personality to win such a competition? And there is another question: is this winner also able and has the potential to deliver „in the wild” what is promised in the protected space of a competition?

We actually talk about this with the jury right from the start. I find the different perspectives extremely exciting. Especially with John Carewe, this old wizard, who has seen everything and everyone. He knows every trick and doesn’t just look at the technical aspects, although he is a teacher, but also says: “is this really someone, is he/she a „stage animal” or something else? And of course I also look into that. I watch the conductors from the audience’s perspective, from behind, just as my audience gets to see them. Other jurors would sit in the orchestra or behind it or look at the monitor to see what’s going on with the candidate’s facial expressions and gestures. It’s exciting, of course. But we are approaching this phenomenon from different angles.

This means, your jury is not sitting together in the hall, but in different places?

Correct. They are all spread out in the hall. It’s quite funny, sometimes people in the audience ask: where is the jury sitting? They aren’t seated in one place but sitting here and there... Barbara Hannigan would sit at the back of the hall, under the organ, John Carewe always sits in the orchestra with his score and takes a chair somewhere between the violas. Then we come together after each round in the competition and report, from different perspectives, and in every respect, both from what we’ve seen and from what our profession is. I have never experienced that in other competitions- I think it’s really a special feature here in Bamberg.

It’s a lot of expertise that we have gathered here together, and above all, they are all taking part from the very beginning, from day one till the end. We do not just observe single performances, but also the development of our candidates throughout the competition. Everyone can have a bad day sometimes, but maybe their preliminary was outstanding, so we might give them a second chance.

The orchestra also has a representative on the jury. She is a member of the orchestra board, but she does not vote on her own- she goes to the different sections after each performance and collects opinions, sometimes even votes. Then she’d return to the jury saying: I have 37 to 73! Or sometimes just opinions or comments. Sometimes she might say that the brass players really liked someone, but the strings could not follow at all. The rest of the jury will never decide anything completely against the orchestra, so the representative from the orchestra is in a very powerful position.
We hardly have any rules in this jury. We don’t score points or so, we just talk. And it always results very organically in a consensus, or something of that kind. Of course, everyone has their own opinion, but we give an overall verdict that reflects the different opinions and where everyone could agree in the end.

But how do you find this unity at the end? You have some pretty strong personalities in your jury…

There have been situations that were clear right away- everyone could agree after having listened to arguments from all sides. Or there were situations when perhaps a few jurors had different opinions- two were against and all others were in favour. But then these two would say, okay, if the majority is in good arguments, we will follow.

But 15 people on the jury is not a small number, do you then have someone who leads the discussion and counts the votes?

Jakub Hrůša, Bamberg Symphony’s Chief conductor, is the President of the jury. And he is a very charming president, so to speak. It’s quite exciting when we have controversies, but mostly the whole jury seeks to come to a unanimous decision. It has a bit to do with the personalities, and that is the most difficult part of the whole competition: how do I put together a jury with such completely different personalities. With great artists, who naturally are strong characters and accordingly have a huge artistic self-confidence. We need to find around 15 people who can sit in a room together, discussing for ten days, and can still get along afterwards. They would also go to dinner together, every night. Even though it’s voluntary, they all come along. So, chemistry is extremely important, because if you have someone who doesn’t fit in, it blows the whole thing up and the competition becomes much more difficult.

How do you manage anyway to get all these busy artists and managers together?

There is one factor besides the competition, and that is the location. Bamberg is a beautiful place to be, with its thousand-year-old world cultural heritage. It has a great hall, a good orchestra, and then there is Gustav Mahler. Our jury is full of Mahler fans, like Thomas Hampson. Plus, we have Marina Mahler, the granddaughter of the composer, a truly charming lady, who throws her weight behind the competition to attract new members.

Sometimes artists who are already part of the jury bring along others, like Deborah Borda who said: “yes, I’ll come, but I’d like to bring a friend, who might fit in well”. Then she brought Ara Guzelimian. Ara came along and the two complemented each other perfectly.

Bamberg is not a big city…

… and that is exactly why people love to come. They all live in London, Tokyo, New York etc. so coming here feels a bit like vacation. It’s a kind of a retreat, and that helps, of course. We shamelessly exploit this advantage (laughs). The city is super beautiful, there are fine restaurants, interesting antique stores… so all in all, there is really something on offer.

Back to the orchestra- where do your musicians get the motivation to play with all these youngsters? Elsewhere, orchestras are known to avoid competitions, play only at finals, or play with a lot of substitutes because musicians are not really interested…

I think the orchestra is genuinely interested in young conductors. We have for example a line of studio productions for BR (Bavarian Radio) which we have been doing since 1950. There, we always try out young conductors. Andris Nelsons was one of them while he was still unknown, and the orchestra immediately was lying at his feet. Same for Robin Ticciati. So, there is a certain tradition in Bamberg when it comes to young conductors. And this competition is exciting for our musicians because they meet conductors who really might be major talents of tomorrow.

The other thing is, that this orchestra plays without any “autopilot”. There are orchestras which do have this: if the conductor is not good, immediately everyone plays like they are used to, “to save the performance” or simply to make life easier. Not in Bamberg. During the competition, they all play in “mirror mode”. They do exactly what the conductor is showing, no matter what the sound, no matter how good or bad. And every hour or (during the first round) every half hour, they switch back to zero. It’s quite exhausting and you need a certain skill to do that, because you must constantly reset your inner memory. And then of course, doing Mahler Seven over and over is not a walk in the park.

They are all really, really committed. And because we always do Mahler’s music in the competition, the orchestra is always huge, and everyone is in... place from the very first day. I think there are few competitions in the world offering the candidates, already in the first round, to conduct Mahler for a world-class orchestra. It’s like driving a Ferrari whilst you did your license on a Volkswagen... Some people are completely overwhelmed the moment they find themselves in front of such an amazing orchestra. But it’s also exciting because we can really recognize the talent of someone who can cope with such a large and demanding group, how quickly they can adjust their level of expectation, what are they going to do with the orchestra in half an hour.

In the end, that’s exactly what a successful conductor needs to do. If you’d stand in front of the Vienna or the Berlin Philharmonic, they’d expect you to tell them what to do, or at least keep them entertained, because they have already seen and know everything. So, there is this adrenaline rush that comes with the moment, and it’s very exciting because you can feel it even in the hall. This is the reason why we have a lot of audience in the hall right from the beginning of the competition, people who really go and follow our candidates from day one to the finals.

Back in 2004, at your very first competition, Gustavo Dudamel won First Prize. Are there any memories from that time?

Yes, he came – I wasn’t there, I only know from stories- he was able to apply for Bamberg only because already then, we were the only competition that covered all the costs and didn’t charge any fees: we’d pay for the candidates’ flights, accommodation, and even a daily allowance. He lived in a township in Caracas, Barquisimeto, and had no money at all. He was working for El Sistema and someone told him about our competition, so he sent some blurred VHS videos. In that year, every candidate was asked to bring a piece from their home country, so he brought a Venezuelan composer and the jury felt in the first instance that he was extraordinarily gifted. But then, in the second round, he almost didn’t advance. Maybe he was jet lagged or had a bad day- I don’t know, but the jury discussed quite a while before putting him through to the next round - as a wild card, so to speak. The rest is history... I think this is really an important aspect in our competition: we do look twice. We don’t say: thank you, this is not enough.
We want to give people another chance- if we believe in their talent.
ARTIST FORUM: TABEA ZIMMERMANN

One of the best-known violists of today, Tabea Zimmermann has performed with many major orchestras around the world and has been artist in residence at the Concertgebouw, Berlin Philharmonic, and Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra. Several composers have written music for her, including György Ligeti, Heinz Holliger, Wolfgang Rihm, and Bruno Mantovani.

When she was 15 years old, Tabea Zimmermann won First Prize at the Geneva Competition, followed by first prizes in Paris and Budapest. Besides her extensive career as performer and professor of viola, she chairs the board of the Ernst von Siemens Foundation (Ernst von Siemens Musikstiftung) in Munich and the Hindemith Foundation in Blonay, Switzerland.

WFIMC: You won the Geneva Competition in 1982... what memories do you have from back then?

Tabea Zimmermann: It was shortly before my 16th birthday, in September 1982. Having spent ten years at the municipal music school in Lahr, where I received the very best basic training you could possibly get, I went to study with Ulrich Koch as a junior student in Freiburg. One time, he went on sabbatical for a few months and appointed a former student as a substitute. When he came back, he simply announced in my lesson: „Good afternoon, you know you’re going to Geneva?”.

„I’m going to Geneva?” I thought.

He just sent me there, but I had taken part in the “Jugend Musiziert” national competition a few months earlier, and I had already studied most of the repertoire required for the Geneva competition. At the summer academy in 1982 at the Mozarteum Salzburg, I had played the Stamitz Concerto for the first time with an orchestra. There was a young conductor who was selected by the conducting course at the time, and his name was Paavo Järvi. He was twenty at the time, we practiced the Stamitz together, and I went to Geneva with that experience, so to speak.

The competition was a clearly positive experience for me, not only because I won but also because I could play my best in all three rounds and stay relaxed. I had nothing to loose. Having said this, I think a competition is always wonderful for just one person, namely the winner, and for everyone else it might bring a lot of frustration.

For everyone else?

I think so. I went from round to round and I went home with this first prize. Incidentally, the teaching assistant of Ulrich Koch who had prepared me was also in the final. She won second or third prize. But in the end, a lot of things came out of it for me. I immediately received an invitation from Gidon Kremer to his festival in Lockenhaus. Maybe that was the most important consequence of this competition for me, because the Lockenhaus Festival opened many doors for me. So I was the duckling in the pond, in a completely different age group than everyone else there, but they took me seriously and went on tour with me in the following years. I traveled the world, I was in Australia, Taiwan, Korea, New York, Chicago, Copenhagen... Those were all great first opportunities to perform with sometimes crazy but interesting colleagues, and I benefited a lot from that. I got to know an incredible amount of music and met lots of new people, but I also observed a lot of negative things, thought about what I didn’t want to be, and what I didn’t want to become.

But it didn’t all end with Geneva, did it?

These early opportunities came more or less directly after the Geneva competition. But when I came back to Freiburg, my teacher immediately asked me to prepare for another competition, the Maurice Vieux in Paris 1983. Maurice Vieux was a French violist, who had contributed to the development of instrumental playing, and the French viola society organized the competition a few times until probably 2000.
And you won again.
Yes, but I found the competition much harder because I felt the heavy burden of having to win first prize at the age of now 16 very clearly. I wanted to prove to myself and others that I had deserved the First Prize in Geneva. Following Paris, I got into a big argument with my teacher. He wanted me to go to the 1983 ARD Competition in Munich, which would have been my third international competition during that same year.

And I refused. Today, I’m incredibly proud of young Tabea, who sensed at the time that it could be dangerous to go. I didn’t feel up to it, and I didn’t want to take credit for my teacher. I could actually feel this in the background, and he even expressed it later on, arguing about it for months. “Go to Munich!” “No, I’m not going to Munich!” At every lesson.

Then came the end of September and I thought I had my peace because the ARD Competition was over. But the comments went on for the next six months. „Why didn’t you go to Munich?”… „You could have easily done it!”… He just kept going on and on, even with the unkind words: „Look, if you have a horse like that in the stable, it just has to run!”. Not a very pleasant thing to say.

I began to look for a new teacher. That was actually quite tragic, because I had just started to study with Koch. In the end, I stayed on and volunteered to take part in the Budapest Competition of 1984, as a kind of peace offering for my teacher.

But Budapest went well after all this?
It was an incredible burden, but I did receive First Prize. Apart from that, I remember a very interesting situation. After the first round of the competition, I met Yuri Bashmet somewhere in the hallway of the Liszt Academy. He approached me and said: “I don’t know you, but I know you can do better!”. He gave me a prep talk and actually took a bit of the pressure off me. Looking back, I think I played better because he spoke to me and encouraged me. I thought that was great, even though it is most probably against the rules... but in any case- that was 1984, and after Budapest I was done with competitions.

After winning Budapest, you “changed sides” and only came to competitions as a juror, like the last Maurice Vieux Competition in 2000. Do you encourage your students to take part in competitions?
I think there weren’t as many competitions back then as there are today, especially not viola competitions. My personal experience was a positive one, but I do not suggest it to my students. I believe that people’s expectations are often quite blurred. Many do not train their self-awareness sufficiently and then hope to receive some kind of positive evaluation from outside that will boost their self-esteem. My experience as a teacher is that competitions work only for those who already know who they are, what they can do, and what they cannot do. Those who can make an artistic statement, those who have a high instrumental flexibility and stylistic versatility - only those should really go. The others should rather not- because I think the damage inflicted is sometimes greater than the benefits you can gain.

What if someone simply wants to go and try out?
Many people say that, but I think it’s not true. It’s often a protective attitude. Students say: “I want to try, I just want to see what it’s like, I’ll use it to learn repertoire. I don’t need it, it’s not important, etc...”. They come up with all kinds of claims, but when they get kicked out after the first round it can hit them very hard. I see this very often, and in this respect I believe that what they say beforehand doesn’t really correspond to what they really want, or hope. While I try to protect my students, I haven’t forbidden anyone to do it, either. To put it differently: I don’t actively encourage it.

But not all Competitions are equally difficult or demanding....
That’s absolutely clear. I was talking about the bigger ones, because we had two big viola competitions last year, ARD and Prague Spring.

I hadn’t been on a jury for many years, for various reasons. Firstly, because I simply didn’t have the time. I’ve raised three children, played a lot of concerts, taught a lot, and competitions were sort of „further down” on my list of priorities. Interestingly enough, Prague Spring discovered the viola as a competition instrument only now. It was the first time in the long history of the Prague Spring that a viola competition was held.
It was really their first time?
Yes. And it was a good experience. Very well organized, very good level, nice jury...

You didn’t take part in the ARD Competition as a competitor. What about as a juror?
Somehow it didn’t work out yet. Maybe I’ll be able to go in a few years, whenever Viola is up again. Being very active as a teacher, I find it not easy to remain objective about my own students in a competition... I don’t think there is objectivity in the arts, to put it bluntly. So it’s all the more important to have a big and diverse jury and clear rules about not voting for your own students, of course.

As far as students of jury members are concerned, we have pretty clear rules, and teachers of participants cannot vote on their students.

It’s complicated. The viola world is small, and you always run into the same people. First of all, I think it’s not easy to define the standards of judgement, the criteria of what a competition is looking for. What do you actually want to hear? When is someone a good musician? I have my own criteria, very clear ones, but they are not the same for everyone on a jury. How do you reach an agreement in a jury? How do you value the artistic part, the instrumental part, the presentation, the self-confidence... There are so many different aspects to what makes an artist, it’s really quite complex.

You were not on the jury, but you went to the ARD competition after all...
I couldn’t stay for the whole competition, so they asked me to be a “TV expert” during the finals. That was great fun. In the end, one of my students won, and that was exciting too. At first I thought: “How do I deal with this...?” Here was my student Haesue Lee and I was not sure that the jury would approve of her playing. But then my assessment was exactly where the jury was, and all turned out well.

Besides the teacher issue, where do you see problems with today’s competitions?
Sometimes I wish that big competitions would be organized differently. I would like the video pre-selection to be done by the same big jury and with a few small and characteristic pieces, simply to find out the few contestants who are not up to level. Then in the first round I would like to hear either excerpts from the later rounds or a variety of styles and skills, and only then narrow down the number to a smaller group and give them enough time to present their strong sides.

Also, I wish they would have short pieces from different eras right in the beginning. Not only Reger and Hindemith in the first round, and a classical concerto only in the semi-finals. Stylistic diversity only makes sense if you actually have a chance to evaluate it.
We live in a very polarized world today, the Russia-Ukraine war and the war in Israel just two examples of the many crises we are facing. How does this polarization affect young musicians?

Political crises and wars unfortunately lead to prejudice against not a single person but against a whole group of people. We need to look at the individual, not ethnic groups.

As for the Russia-Ukraine war, I think big mistakes were made years ago. When Russia annexed Crimea in 2014, there was a list of Russian artists who supported Putin. It should have been much better known and people could have drawn their conclusions.

At the same time, it is completely wrong to take this out on young artists who just want to make music. If someone is an explicit political supporter of an autocratic regime, then things are different. But we must not generalize.

You decided not to perform in Verbier anymore...

I wrote a “silent” letter, only to the festival management, that I was not coming anymore. This was years ago already, in 2018. I didn’t want to be paid with the money of an oligarch. Now, of course, years later, the festival has finally realized how much trouble they got themselves into, and they pulled the plug. Far too late in my opinion.

I think there is a lot of dirty money used to support the arts. But the most important thing for young artists is autonomy. We should not create dependencies. This includes, for example, grants for great instruments. My advice for young violists would be: Keep your hands off dirty money. Don’t let it buy you. It’s wonderful if you can get a scholarship to support your studies or even a grant to support your career. But things can also go wrong. My advice: maintain your independence artistically and financially whenever possible.

At the same time, it has become a lot harder to make a career as a musician nowadays, because of so much competition and so many hurdles that you might not have had in the past. And there are definitely some competition models that really help you to overcome these hurdles.

Yes, I can definitively see these elements. But I think we have to talk a bit about what you can achieve socially with music. What do young people expect from the term “career”? What does it involve? What questions of our time an artist should take a stand on? There is quite an overload of things that are expected of young people. There are even agencies that will only accept an artist with a certain minimum of Instagram followers – can you believe that? This has nothing to do with quality. Nothing at all, and I can only warn against it. These agents present themselves as “supporters” of young people, but they are actually corrupting them, making them believe in a business model rather than think about an artistic message.

You have many young students- how do you see their future chances in this difficult environment?

The bad news is, it looks as if cultural institutions might be shrinking, public support for the radio stations, orchestras, theaters, and academies might be going down. I hope we can continue to give the talented musicians from around the world a free and comprehensive artistic education in our public music academies. Hopefully the young generation will use music and the arts to solve the big problems that the last generations have created. I see a big revival for chamber music, for example. There are fantastic young string quartets, and there is a serious interest in chamber music. I always dream of sending string quartets to perform in remote areas, as there is a growing demand to bring cultural activities to the countryside, not only to big cities. The coronavirus has helped to bring back smaller ensembles, too. And as far as the quality of young musicians is concerned, they are getting better and better.

As for my students, I am not so worried. Viola as a solo instrument does not really exist as a profession- my students are trained as versatile, reflective musicians who will find their place in a variety of fields, from early music to string quartet, orchestra, opera, new music and teaching.

I don’t know what the future holds, but I hope we won’t always look at music as a business model, and we musicians will continue to be heard as important voices in society.

2024 GENERAL ASSEMBLY
68TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN PARMA

Parma, Italy, 5-9 June 2024

Hosted by the Arturo Toscanini International Conducting Competition

Live performance of the Filarmonica Toscanini on Piazza Duomo
Parma: an invitation

Italian Capital of Culture 2020-2021; UNESCO Creative City of Gastronomy, birthplace of Giuseppe Verdi and Arturo Toscanini: this amber stucco city, built by Farnese dukes, has amazing domes, Renaissance art and thrilling history, with the food arguably its biggest draw. Parma’s pastas, slow-cured hams and parmigiano Reggiano predate the 14th century, when the great Tuscan writer Giovanni Boccaccio contemplated over grated cheese on ravioli in The Decameron.

Even though it is famous for its art, architecture, and cuisine, Parma is somewhat off the radar of the millions of tourists who come to Italy every year. The Romans founded this beautiful city in 183 BC, and it was very important as a road junction. Parma was rebuilt in the Middle Ages and was ruled by its bishops from the 9th century. It is the city where the Italian flag, or il Tricolore, was first adopted. Its main attractions are the Grand Romanesque Cathedrale, the Baptistery with ancient frescoes, Pilotta palace with the gallery, theatre and museums, and of course a lot of restaurants with delicious and authentic food.

Parma is a "must-see" city for every art lover. It has a beautiful National Gallery (Galleria Nazionale) where you can enjoy artworks by local artists Parmigianino and Correggio and masterpieces made by Leonardo Da Vinci and Canaletto. Not to mention Parma’s churches where you can find spectacular frescoes, as well as the University of Parma, where the collection of more recent fine art, photography, and fashion is kept.

Parma City of Music: an Itinerary

Parma is the city of art and good food, but it’s also a city of music and theatre. This passion is something that goes beyond the simple pairing Parma-Giuseppe Verdi, because it is visible in the variety of events and buildings dedicated to music: the Auditorium Paganini, the House of Music, the Birthplace and museum Arturo Toscanini, the House of Sound, and last but not least the Regio theatre, a structure that opened in 1829, remaining one of the most renowned theatres in the world.

In the beautiful Piazzale San Francesco, not far from Piazza Duomo, you’ll be welcome by Giuseppe Verdi in a bronze version, seated on a bench and always available to pose for a selfie. Behind him, there is Cusani palace with the House of Music, that hosts the museum L'opera in scena, dedicated to the music on stage in Parma. The palace is also the "refuge" of the Club dei 27, the 27 Verdi operas in flesh and bones whose purpose is to divulgate Giuseppe Verdi’s works to the young generations and to everyone.

Almost in front of the square there is the deconsecrated church of Santa Elisabetta, that is now the House of Sound, a rich collection of instruments for communication and sound reproduction, from the phonograph to mp3, represented by the collection of don Giovanni Patanè, that includes over 400 items among phonograph and radios of every kind. Both museums are free.

The Farnese Theatre

Built in 1618, Teatro Farnese is the first modern theatre of the Western world. It was built rapidly, using lightweight materials like wood and painted plaster to fulfill the desire of Ranuccio Farnese, Duke of Parma, to celebrate a planned stay in Parma. Designed by Giovanni Battista Aleotti, who created the first enclosed space for performances equipped with an engineering system for moving scenery, the theatre was inaugurated in 1628 and used for Ducal celebrations and festivities. Almost completely destroyed in a 1944 bombing raid and re-built in modern times, the Theatre was restored to us as one of the most extraordinary examples of theatrical architecture of the 17th century.
Nearby the Ducal park, right in the old and “working-class” district called Oltretorrente, lies the Birthplace of Arturo Toscanini, transformed into a museum in 1967, on the 100th anniversary of his birth. The exhibition follows a memory tour along the career of the great orchestra director (free entrance).

Parma is also the place where the great composer and violinist Nicolò Paganini is buried - a true rockstar of his time, a bit doomed and really gifted one, born in Genova but resident in the Parma area for a long time. An auditorium designed by Renzo Piano, located in the ex Eridania park, is dedicated to Paganini. The famous architect renovated an old sugar factory (Eridania) to build this amazing structure now hosting the Arturo Toscanini Foundation.

Arturo Toscanini Foundation

The Arturo Toscanini Foundation is among the most important and dynamic music institutions in Italy, specialised in the production of symphonic and opera performances, and in professional training of young people in the performing arts. A musical institution supported by the Italian Ministry of Culture, it was founded in 1994, when the Emilia-Romagna Region, the Parma City Council and the Province of Parma wished to give a worthy heir to the former Association of the same name established in the 1970s. Each year, the Toscanini Foundation stages around 100 symphonic concerts and 40 opera performances, both at home in Parma and in the most prestigious Italian and international venues.

For its musical activities, the Foundation boasts three ensembles, active all year round: the Arturo Toscanini Philharmonic, which performs its wide symphonic repertoire and engages the greatest international soloists and orchestra conductors; the Arturo Toscanini Orchestra, which performs not only in artistic and educational activities, but also in the production of operas; and the new „Toscanini Next”, an innovative orchestral project at the service of the community.
With its Community music programme, La Toscanini highlights the role of music to pursue a higher quality of life, dignity and development of social justice and wellbeing.

Toscanini Competition

Arturo Toscanini International Conducting Competition, dedicated to the great conductor who was born here in 1867 and died in New York in 1957, was established in 1985 and became a member of the World Federation in 1986. Organized by the foundation that bears the name of its master, the competition is considered one of the most important international competitions dedicated to the discovery of new talents in the field of conducting. Focusing entirely on opera conducting, the competition will hold its 12th edition in June 2025.

Filarmonica Arturo Toscanini

The Filarmonica Arturo Toscanini, today considered one of the most important symphony orchestras in Italy, was founded in Parma in 2002 as a continuation of the historical and fruitful experience of the Orchestra dell’Emilia-Romagna Arturo Toscanini. Inspired by the values of Maestro Arturo Toscanini - severity, talent, inspiration and commitment - the Orchestra’s activity is characterized by a continuous search for quality, from classical repertoire to contemporary, from chamber groups to the great symphonism.

In September 2020, Enrico Onofri was appointed as new Principal Conductor, succeeding Alpesh Chauhan (2017-2020). Over its history the Filarmonica Arturo Toscanini has been conducted by many distinguished and prominent conductors such as Vladimir Jurowski, Fabio Luisi, Tugan Sokhiev, Lorin Maazel, Kurt Masur, Zubin Mehta, Mstislav Rostropovich and Yuri Temirkanov. Collaborations with internationally celebrated artists include Mischa Maisky, Ivo Pogorelich, Viktoria Mullova, Gil Shaham, Steven Isserlis, Krystian Zimerman, Salvatore Accardo, Placido Domingo, Jean-Yves Thibaudet and Maxim Vengerov.

Vanessa Larche, Artistic Director of the Hastings International Piano Competition
WFIMC: Please tell us about the background, history, specialty, and legacy of your competition.

Vanessa Latarche: The Hastings International Piano Concerto Competition is an internationally-renowned competition for young concert pianists that takes place every 2 years. Although its roots go back more than a century, it has enjoyed a resurgence in recent years and now received applications from all over the world. The 2024 competition will take place between 22 February and 2 March 2024.

Around 40 young concert pianists aged between 16 and 30 are chosen by video audition to take part in the competition. These 40 participants take part in the first round, before an international jury of specialists who have the difficulty of choosing just 20 for the second round, 10 of whom go forward into the semi-finals, and 5 to the final round.

Unusually among piano competitions, competitors are offered the opportunity to perform a piano concerto from the earliest rounds.

Which countries and regions are most important among your competitors?

We’re an international competition and we are proud that we have competitors from all over the world. This year 40 pianists will travel to Hastings from 18 countries, including China and South Korea, the USA, Australia and many European countries. No one country or region is any more important than any other.

What do you offer the laureates in terms of career support?

I’m really delighted that we’ve been able to secure a fantastic package to support prizewinners. As well as the Sophia Guo Award - a £15,000 cash prize - our first prize winner is also awarded the Hastings Fellowship, an artist development and professional coaching package provided by Lydia Connolly from one of the UK’s leading artists’ agents, Harrison Parrott, and Trudy Wright. There are other cash prizes for other prize winners. And there are also professional engagements, including concerts in Hastings and London with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, as well as engagements in the UK and Europe.

Has your competition changed since the pandemic?

Yes, in some ways. The pandemic taught us to be more flexible and we could reach an even wider audience by making the competition available to a global audience by streaming it in its entirety. That has been a really positive development and one we plan to continue for the future. And we also accepted video auditions for the first time during the pandemic - and that has been positive because it has reduced the cost for competitors and also reduced our carbon footprint significantly!

Anneli Rahn, Chairman of the Foundation for Music Promotion in Central Finland ©Helena Minkkilä
WFIMC: Please tell us about the background, history, specialty, and legacy of your competition.

Anneli Rahn: The Ilmari Hannikainen Competition was originally a solo piano event for Finnish pianists. It has been held since 1974 in the City of Jyväskylä, and was quickly established as a major music competition in Finland. Ilmari Hannikainen (1892-1955) was born in Jyväskylä, and built an impressive career as composer, concert pianist, and pedagogue, as well as chamber musician in an ensemble with his brothers. His popular compositions are still widely played. Our competition continues to keep his legacy alive.

Around 2018 we felt a need to overhaul the format to make it more unique. Chamber music should be in the main role as it had been in Ilmari Hannikainen’s life. The natural evolution was to change the concept in 2020 to piano chamber music based on the idea of our board member Juha Heikkinen. We opened the competition to worldwide contestants, and this expansion was a resounding success in every way. Live streaming and radio audiences as well as press coverage reached record numbers, never seen before in music competitions in Jyväskylä.

The cycle is three years. Our Foundation organizes the competition in cooperation with The Finnish Music Campus and Jyväskylä Sinfonia orchestra. The next Ilmari Hannikainen Piano Chamber Music Competition February 26 – March 6, 2026 is open for piano trios (piano, violin, cello), violin and piano duos, or piano duos either for four hands or two pianos. Age range for competitors is 16-35. All ensembles compete through three rounds in the same series, and the concerto finales are played together with Jyväskylä Sinfonia. The entire competition is streamed live over the internet, and ensembles receive recordings of their performances. The venue is the Ilmari Hannikainen Hall at the Finnish Music Campus. Orchestra finales will be played at the Encore Concert Hall.

Do you have any wishes for joining WFIMC?

As a new member we are very happy with the visibility and attention we have enjoyed so far. We hope that membership will bring us diverse ensembles with a wider geographical reach.

What are the goals of your competition for the future?

We hope to establish our competition as one of the important events within our discipline, piano chamber music. Also, we want to promote chamber music as an accessible and audience friendly genre and inspire students in music schools to learn the fine art of performing as an ensemble.

Tell us about your beautiful city where the competition takes place.

Jyväskylä (pop. 145 000), 275 km north of Helsinki is nestled in the beautiful lake district of Central Finland. With a history as the cradle of our progressive school system, Jyväskylä is all about education. Every third person you come across on the street is a student of one kind or other. The Finnish Music Campus is bustling with music students of all levels between kindergarten and university. The competition takes place during the most attractive winter with lots of snow and freezing temperatures. During the 2023 competition we even enjoyed spectacular northern lights, an unforgettable experience for our contestants. We cannot guarantee northern lights for 2026, but we can guarantee a fine competition in a youthful and fun atmosphere.

Founded in 1949, the Ferruccio Busoni International Piano Competition is rich in both tradition and innovation, and is regarded as one of the most successful institutions of its kind. Its biennial structure includes the Glocal Piano Project and final stages that are both intensively followed by audiences worldwide. After the successful conclusion of the final rounds of the 64th edition in September 2023, the work of the Busoni-Mahler Foundation is now dedicated, on the one hand, to supporting the current prize winner, who benefits from a large number of worldwide concert engagements, and on the other hand, to opening registrations for the next biennium. In November 2024, the first round of the competition will take place again in the form of the Glocal Piano Project in cooperation with Steinway & Sons. The competition is firmly against any nationalist appropriation or political propaganda and instead promotes an understanding of musicians as citizens of the world (Weltbürger), independent transnational citizens, in the spirit of its namesake Ferruccio Busoni.

And, of course, the competition makes a major contribution to honoring Ludwig van Beethoven by drawing attention to his genius and perpetuating his memory in his “hometown” of Bonn. The central idea is to encourage a new generation of pianists. Furthermore it is an incentive to take an even greater interest in Beethoven’s work. Apart from its artistic aspiration the competition attaches great importance to a personal atmosphere. The participants are accommodated in host families. There they have the opportunity to rehearse and to get an impression of life in Beethoven’s native city of Bonn, whose dedicated concert-goers will accompany the artists through all the competition rounds, contributing to a great concert atmosphere. For those who are not able to experience the competition in person, all performances will be available per internet live streaming.

Johann Nepomuk Hummel (1778–1837), a native of Bratislava, was considered one of the greatest composers and pianists during his lifetime. He studied with Mozart, Salieri and Haydn. Among his compositions, he excelled most in the realm of virtuoso piano music. From the stylistic point of view, Hummel unites elements of Late Classicism with many Early Romantic elements. Thus Hummel is an exponent of the style which follows the legacy of Clementi, Mozart and Beethoven, simultaneously adumbrating Schubert, Mendelssohn, Chopin, young Liszt and Schumann. The Johann Nepomuk Hummel International Piano Competition aims at helping the active cultivation of the legacy of this great composer and piano virtuoso. The Competition was established in 1992 and is organised by the Slovak Philharmonic. Simultaneously, the organizers hope to help young remarkable pianists to start a concert career.

One of the most demanding and also one of the most widely publicized international competitions, the Queen Elisabeth Competition, ever since its creation in 1937, has established itself as a springboard for young violinists, pianists, singers, and cellists on the threshold of an international career. The Competition aims, above all, to serve as an intermediary between those young virtuosos and the world’s great musical venues.

Steadfastly committed to the project initiated by Eugène Ysaÿe and Queen Elisabeth, the Queen Elisabeth Competition seeks to discover complete artists; it owes its reputation to a prestigious jury, strict rules, and unparalleled media coverage, as well as to the friendly and enthusiastic hospitality offered by an entire country and its Royal Family. For the finalists, one of the highlights of the Competition is their stay at the Queen Elisabeth Music Chapel, which offers them an opportunity to spend a whole week studying, without any external assistance, a new work to be performed with an orchestra.

It is most likely that we shall never know how Franz Liszt played the piano. According to his contemporaries no one could follow in his footsteps. What is certain is that his personality, unique technique and compositional skills continue to be influential. It is not surprising that the Academy of Music launched the first Franz Liszt International Piano Competition in 1933, led by Ernő Dohnányi, with similar talents to those of Liszt’s. The winner of the first competition was Annie Fischer, one of Dohnányi’s students. The tradition, together with the genius of Liszt is binding, therefore the Franz Liszt International Piano Competition is one of the most prestigious Hungarian and international events. The Maestro Solti International Conducting Competition, like the Liszt Competition organised by Filharmonia Hungary, undertook the organisation of the traditional event of Hungarian television conducting competitions in order to provide new opportunities for young talents. Successful applicants will have an excellent opportunity to receive invitations to perform, to win prizes and to gain the love of the audience together with the appreciation of the orchestras.

This triennial chamber music competition is held in three categories: "Lied" (evaluated as a duo) and "Piano Trio" (Piano, Violin and Cello), and this time also "Piano Duo" as a new category. Joseph Breinl, Chia Chou and Sivan Silver-Garburg & Gil Garburg, professors at our university, are artistically responsible in their individual category.
An essential and internationally unique element of this competition is to compare contemporary music with the works of Schubert on an equal footing and equal value. The challenge of seriously dealing with modernity is an important incentive for young musicians to connect to today.
Another key element is our commitment to designing this competition to be as relevant to participants' profession and future as possible: it can be considered as a link between the participants' university studies and the entry into professional life.

Jury: Sakari Oramo (chair)
Artists: Finnish Radio Symphony Orchestra and Helsinki Philharmonic Orchestra

The International Jean Sibelius Violin Competition is one of the most prestigious music competitions in the world. The Sibelius Society of Finland launched the competition in 1965 in connection with the 100th anniversary of Sibelius’ birth. The situation at the outset was impressive. An Honorary Committee was set up and a large number of distinguished musicians agreed to become members. Among them were Sir John Barbirolli, Herbert von Karajan, Yehudi Menuhin, David Oistrakh, Eugene Ormandy, Igor Stravinsky and Henryk Szeryng. The honour of chairing the Committee naturally fell to Aino Sibelius. Since 1965 the competition – without an Honorary Committee – has been held every five years. Young violinists from all over the world who have not yet reached their 30th birthday have been able to demonstrate their musical talents and compete with one another.

Competitors play both optional and obligatory repertoire, while finalists perform the Sibelius Violin Concerto and one other violin concerto with the Helsinki Philharmonic Orchestra or the Finnish Radio Symphony Orchestra. The members of the Jury have always been internationally well-established violinists and violin teachers, whereas the Chairmen have been Finns – so far Tauno Hannikainen, Joonas Kokkonen, Tuomas Haapanen, Aulis Sallinen, Mikko Heinio and Jukka-Pekka Saraste. The artistic importance of the competition lies in its potential for discovering new talents and helping young artists in their careers. The competition is nowadays organised jointly by the Sibelius Society of Finland and the Sibelius Academy.

Every spring the new theater Infanta Leonor takes the celebration of the contest in. This is one of the oldest competitions in the field of music, which has been won by players of 20 different countries in its 64 editions, confirming its international impact. Pieces of great composers will be played by young piano players under the age of 32, who must also pass three qualifying rounds. Between the works —all of them with a high interpretation level— stands out the commissioned piece, composed exclusively for the contest by very well-known Spanish musicians. In this edition, the composer Iluminada Pérez Frutos created a musical piece, entitled “Crepúsculo en los Jardines de Jabalcuz”. Endorsed by awards like the Medal of Honour of the Royal Academy of Arts of Granada or the Manuel de Falla Award, given by the Regional Government of Andalucía, the reputation of this contest is also reflected in the amount of its awards. There are seven awards: the first, second and third award, the “Chamber Music” Prize, the “Rosa Sabater” award to the best Spanish music interpretation and the “Contemporary Music” award and the “Audience Award”.

Odesa International Violin Competition

Due to the ongoing war in Ukraine, the Odesa International Violin Competition will not take place until further notice. Please check our social media for updates.

The formation of violin music education in Odesa is closely linked to the activities of the outstanding violin teacher Peter Stolyarsky. Since 1920, he taught at the Odesa Conservatory (currently the Odesa National A. V. Nezhdanova Academy of Music), and in 1933 founded the first specialized music school in the USSR for gifted children. Jacques Thibaud, for example, said: “His pedagogy is what world art should be proud of.” The educational experience of Stolyarsky yielded brilliant results. His students, in particular David Oistrakh, Boris Goldstein, Nathan Milstein, Elizabeth Gilels, Michael Fichtenholz brought the Odesa violin school international recognition. Prominent violinists such as Zakhar Bron, Pavel Vernikov, Rosa Fain, Dora Schwarzberg, Michael Vaiman and many others became bright followers of the Odesa violin school. Taking into account such a rich history, the emergence of the Odesa International Violin Competition has become an important event in the cultural life of the city, which can rightfully be considered the cradle of violin performing art and one of the largest cultural centers in Eastern Europe. The competition is open to young violinists from all countries and provides a unique opportunity to get a start in a great creative life in the homeland of musicians whose names are written in golden letters in the world history of classical music.

Though it boasts the status of the world’s oldest violin competition in existence, it keeps setting itself new goals, as well as addresses current requirements of both the event’s participants and audiences. The latest edition (2022) brought changes in the composition of the jury, which opened itself to non-violinist musicians, conductors, or managers. A lot of emphasis was also put on transparency: upon closing the event, both the final results, and partial scores of particular stage auditions were published. Besides statutory prizes (prize pool of 115,000 Euro), and a number of special trophies, for the first time in the history of the competition one of the awards for the winners was also an international Concert Tour, which consisted of over eighty dates on five continents. Competition auditions enjoyed record-breaking viewership: as many as 3 million music lovers around the world followed live coverage and materials related to the 16th edition of the Wieniawski, thus exceeding previous events’ numbers tenfold.

The Ettore Pozzoli International Piano Competition was established in 1959 by the will of Gina Gambini, widow of the Maestro (Seregno, 1873-1957) who wanted to honour his fame and bequeath to the institution of the Competition that bears his name. The Municipality of Seregno has organized the Pozzoli Competition every two years, with the burden of perpetuating the memory of its illustrious citizen. The project was immediately and enthusiastically supported by Giulio Confalonieri, composer, musical critic and Pozzoli’s pupil: he oversaw, from a technical-organizational point of view, the first seven editions until 1971, bringing the Competition itself on the international scene. Reknown names of the musical scene appear both in the “hall of fame” of the jurors and in that of the winners. Among the latter Maurizio Pollini, who won the coveted first prize at the inaugural edition, and again Pier Narciso Masi, Laura De Fusco, François-Joël Thiolliier, Anna Maria Cigoli, Rolf Plagge, to name just a few. Today’s Pozzoli Competition is the natural and modern evolution of that time, with a clear purpose: making Art, of which piano music is a privileged witness, the most qualified and qualifying tool to favour such as growth processes of young talents, as networking as well as socio-economic and cultural cohesion of the audience that always follows the event. The new venue “L’Auditorium”, a multi-purpose municipal structure, has been added to the historic setting of the San Rocco Theatre in Seregno, where the binding candidates selections and the award ceremony take place.

Founded in 1956, the International Robert Schumann Competition moved to Zwickau, the birthplace of Robert Schumann, in 1963. It joined the World Federation of International Music Competitions, Geneva, as a member in 1961. It has two categories: piano and singing. Pianists, and male and female singers are judged separately and are each awarded a first to third prize. A special prize for the best song accompanist was first awarded in 1989. Since 1996 the Competition takes place every four years. Due to the pandemics the competition for 2020 had to be postponed to the following year and could then only be held as a video competition. But all the twelve prize winners were invited to present themselves in concerts in Zwickau in autumn 2021.
